Contacts 6
As part of the Blended Intensive Programme (BIPs), the University of Parma with Wolfgang Huemer and Andrea Staiti, the Martin-Luther-University Halle-Wittenberg with Heiner Klemme and John Walsh, and the Karl-Franzens-Universität Graz with Philip Berghofer jointly offer their students the opportunity to participate in the Summer School Imagination and Perception.

The Blended Intensive Programme has been officially approved by the EU within the framework of the ERASMUS+ Programme BIPs, which are one of the new and innovative formats of student mobility introduced by the new Erasmus+ 2021-2027 Programme.

These programmes, jointly developed by multiple higher education institutions, feature advanced and innovative pedagogical approaches that combine short-term face-to-face (physical) mobilities with portions of virtual learning.

BIPs are inherently transnational and transdisciplinary, as curricula are developed and taught together by partner institutions in different countries. The combination of in-person and virtual learning spaces allows students and academics to experience and exchange highly collaborative, challenge-based and research-steeped methods of teaching and learning.

Description of the Project

Perception and imagination are two basic modes of our experience. The relations, interconnections, and differences between them have been the object of sustained philosophical reflection since antiquity and up to our present. While it is commonly accepted that perception has some sort of epistemic reliability and that it grants access to the world, philosophers, starting from the ancient sceptics and famously with Descartes, have questioned the extent of such reliability and in some cases have argued for the necessity to integrate or correct perception drawing on rational and imaginative capacities. As for the imagination, while it bears some undeniable resemblance with perceptual experience and in some cases imagination has been used to designate the full scope of sensory experience, it is unclear whether it has any epistemic import. The received view, which harks back to the empiricists, is that the imagination only reshuffles contents that were originally perceived, hence having no bearing on the increment of our knowledge. This view has been challenged by Kant and the German Idealists, who accord the imagination an epistemically robust role, by phenomenology, which considers the imagination vital sources for eidetic insights, and by contemporary analytic philosophy, which often relies on imaginative mental experiments to generate intuitions.

The goal of the summer school is to explore perception and imagination both historically and systematically in order to explore the following questions:

1. Are perception and imagination structurally different?
2. Does the imagination have an epistemic import?
3. Does the power of imagining play a role in our perceptual experience?
4. What is the role of concepts in both perceiving and imagining?
5. What role does the imagination play in aesthetic experience?
6. What are the criteria to distinguish between veridical perception and hallucination or illusion?
7. Are philosophical methods involving the imagination legitimate?
8. What are the problems and prospects of the philosophy of perception and the imagination in the present?
